

Carlos Ghosn was Chairman and CEO of the Renault-Nissan-Mitsubishi Alliance, the automotive collaboration of France's Groupe Renault, Japan's Nissan Motor Co. Ltd. and Mitsubishi Motors Corp. He was also Chairman and CEO of Groupe Renault.

Carlos Ghosn is best known for orchestrating the remarkable turnaround of Nissan from near bankruptcy in 1999-2000. In addition to being the auto industry's longest-serving CEO, he is the first executive to run two companies on the Fortune Global 500 simultaneously. Carlos Ghosn is an outspoken proponent of zero-emission electric vehicles and also established the Alliance as a leader in the development of future automotive technology, such as autonomous drive and connected vehicles and services.

Carlos Ghosn served on the International Advisory Council of Tsinghua University in Beijing and the Strategic Council of Saint Joseph University in Beirut. He was the only major auto industry CEO born and raised in emerging markets. Born in Brazil in 1954, he spent much of his youth in Lebanon.

He graduated with engineering degrees from France's École Polytechnique (Class of 1974) and from École des Mines de Paris in 1978.
